

Background

Anderson & Travis was founded in 1999 by two experienced Colorado attorneys, Wayne Anderson and Richard Travis. It has quickly attained a solid reputation as a law firm that takes an aggressive approach to legal representation and works tirelessly on each client's behalf. Both partners are known as straight shooters and forceful litigators. Thanks to their respected position in the Colorado Springs community, Wayne Anderson and Richard Travis are able to base a substantial part of their practice on referrals.

Anderson & Travis specializes in family law, personal injury cases, criminal defense work, and military law. This combination of practice areas allows the attorneys of Anderson & Travis to meet a variety of their clients' legal needs. In fact, both attorneys have a number of loyal clients who have retained their services on more than one occasion.

The attorneys of Anderson & Travis have a broad range of experience in their practice areas. Their criminal cases vary from traffic tickets to felonies. They have handled multi-million dollar settlement negotiations and lawsuits, but will fight equally zealously for clients with smaller damages. The firm's family law clients come from all walks of life.

Wayne Anderson has more than 30 years of experience as a litigator, and Richard Travis has over 16 years. Both worked as prosecutors before joining forces in private practice. They share the same areas of expertise, which has created a dynamic and cooperative firm environment.

Both Wayne Anderson and Richard Travis have military experience in the Army's Judge Advocate General's Corp (JAG). Their military careers have given them an intimate understanding of the special considerations involved in legal representation of service members and their families. The law firm also offers military discounts in order to better serve the Armed Forces community in the Colorado Springs area.

The dedicated support staff at Anderson & Travis ensures that each case receives the individualized care and attention it deserves. Wayne Anderson and Richard Travis are surrounded by legal professionals who work as a team to provide their clients with the highest level of service. Anderson & Travis is small enough to provide a caring environment and personalized attention, but large enough to handle complex cases.

Anderson & Travis prides itself on being responsive to clients' concerns and sensitive to the emotionally-charged nature of some cases. The law firm's approach to legal practice reflects the value it places on the relationships it has formed with clients and the greater Colorado Springs community.
